PICK SIXTY SPORTS WEEKLY TIP:

For many years the NFC South has been known as a topsy-turvy division where the champion from one season could slip off to second or third the next year while the cellar dweller would emerge from the rubble to become the new playoff darling out of nowhere. New Orleans was poised to stabilize things before Bountygate sent head coach Sean Payton to the gallows for 2012 and the door was open for Atlanta but they followed up a 13-3 campaign with a horrible showing in 2013 (4-12 SU).

Enter the Carolina Panthers. Head Coach Ron Rivera spent two years solidifying the defense and then opened the doors for Cam Newton to showcase his talents in 2013. The Panthers won 10 of their last 14 regular season starts and scored 24.0 points per game, allowing just 14.6.

Against a Tampa Bay Bucs team with a new, albeit experienced coach (Lovie Smith), it makes Carolina seem like an attractive divisional dog in Week 1. The line actually opened at Panthers (-2) but swung to the home side on the concern over Cam Newton's (ribs) status. Here's another thing bettors may want to consider:

SDQL: tA(W)[team and season -1] > 0.5 and oA(W)[o:team and o:season -1] < 0.5 and week=1 and season>=2003 and line>=2

Since 2003, NFL teams who finished above .500 are just 1-11 SU and 1-10-1 ATS when getting more than +2 points against a losing club from last season. This Week 1 angle has produced nine-straight winners and sets up our first play for 2014. Take the Bucs -2 points

Note: It is not SportsBook Breakers recommendation to make plays based solely on one trend (our selections at killercappers.com don't). Weigh these trends along with other factors accordingly.
